Intent

To establish a record not for immediate consumption,

but for preservation across discontinuous time.

This text is not written to persuade, instruct, or explain.

It does not offer a worldview, a method, or a theory to be applied.

What follows is a structural record.

It establishes a criterion by which structures may be accepted, refused,

or left uncontinued.

Readers may find that familiar intellectual tools—

interpretation, agreement, disagreement, belief—

are of limited use here.

This is intentional.

The text does not ask to be understood in advance.

It asks only to be entered under constraint.

If reading becomes difficult, the difficulty should not be resolved too quickly.

If meaning appears absent, the absence should not be repaired.

This work does not belong to any discipline, tradition, or school.

It is not positioned within philosophy, science, or metaphysics, though it may pass through all of them.

The reader is not addressed as an audience,

nor as a subject.

Reading is not a dialogue.

It is a traversal.

What remains after the traversal is the only outcome that matters.
